On this date, Kevin never came to pick up Madeline for visitation, and never contacted me he would be late. I went about my day. Later, I went into the police station to pick up papers, with Madeline. They tried making me wait to talk to an officer about a custody problem, when I was not there for that. I asked them to please give me the papers, as that was what I was instructed to go to the police station for, not to talk to anyone. I had my daughter with me and it was not a good time. I got the copies and left. The officer bum rushed me in the parking lot asking me why I denied Kevin visitation. I explained to him that Kevin didn't pick Madeline up for visitation that day and never called or tried to communicate with me. I was also informed that the police had gone to my house a few times and called me several times to bombard me with questions pertaining to me denying Kevin visitation that day. This is borderline harassment. I cannot even feel comfortable being at my own house without drama from police showing up for a civil matter.
